"A Career in Product Safety and Regulatory Affairs in FMCG companies"

Regulatory affairs is a versatile profession which involves monitoring and ensuring safety, managing compliance and reporting from the developmental phase of a product until its post-market launch.

This job requires knowing the regulations and good understanding of safety and toxicological data. For a scientific professional, this function provides a suitable bridge as it demands basic knowledge in science and data analysis so that one can assess the safety and toxicological aspects of a product during its life cycle. You can work with cross-functional teams within the organization, which not only provides an end-to-end view but also gives a purpose to work for the betterment of the society by ensuring safe and effective delivery of the products.

I will speak about my journey from a PhD in Neurosciences to being a Head of Product Safety and Regulatory Affairs in one of the FMCG giants.
